Ph.D. ABSTRACT

W. B. YEATS AND JUAN RAMON JIMENEZ;
A STUDY OF INFLUENCE AND SIMILARITIES AND A COMPARISON OF THE THEMES OF DEATH, LOVE, POETICS, AND THE QUEST FOR FULFILMENT-IN-TIME.

University Microfilms International No. 77-04000

The study is divided into two parts. The first discusses the occurrence of interest, influence, and similarity. The second comments on relevant literary background and compares the themes.

Part One. Chapter One gives a chronological account (drawn from diverse sources) of Jiménez's lifetime interest in Yeats. It suggests that the interest began shortly after 1905; it discusses Jiménez's reading of Yeats and comments on the translations made by him and his wife. A brief summary of the correspondence they received from Yeats and his agent is included. Chapter Two offers ten examples of Yeats's influence, some technical and some philosophical in nature. Chapters Three and Four cite instances of close similarity and coincidence (whose actual source might lie in a third poet).

Part Two. The first two chapters are concerned with the poets' literary heritage. English Aestheticism and Hispanic El modernismo (problematic labels in both literatures) are seen as fostering Modern attitudes. It is argued that the late 1860s appear in both literatures to be a turning point, and that the next crucial change occurs around 1910. A brief assessment of relevant major poets of the nineteenth century is attempted, and this leads to a broad characterization of the legacy inherited by the poets under study. In the comparison of themes, which follows, it is posited that, as young poets (when their verse is lifeless, pessimistic, autumnal), Yeats and Jiménez are striving to attain impossibly high ideals (Plato's Forms are offered as an analogy). The study finds that after approximately 1910 the poets set about modifying these ideals--forming new attitudes to death, love, poetics, and the quest--and that their verse began to acquire optimism, vigor, modernity.

In discussing various notions the poets entertained for banishing death, the writer finds they lack real conviction. The more the poets accept death's finality, the more dynamic their verse becomes; as that dream of "death's fulfilment" recedes, the task of discovering fulfilment while still alive presents itself with greater urgency. Each poet is seen to pursue this in his experience with love, in his poetic achievements, and by seeking to develop himself (body and spirit) into a more perfect being.

In interpreting the love poetry, it is suggested that a nebulous and intangible love (and beloved) of the early verse is superseded by an intense delight in real love (and woman). In analyzing their ideas on poetics, the writer detects that a poetics of failure (mournfully imitating an unattainable ideal) gives way to a poetics of achievement (joyfully attempting to create a metaphor that is truth, not a pale reflection of it). In discussing poems related to the quest for fulfilment-in-time, it is found that an early trust in what is past, passing, or out of time, yields to a concern to perfect in the present the total being (body with soul, flesh with spirit). To adapt Jiménez's words, fulfilment occurs at a point at which the human experiences what is connoted by the word divine.

Appendices of material tangentially related are also included. There are passages Jiménez marked in Yeats's work; a conspectus of the terms Modernism and El modernismo; and a summary of material linking Yeats and Jiménez to Baudelaire, Verlaine, and Mallarmé.

SYNOPSIS

Self and Image in Juan Ramón Jiménez (Modern & Post-Modern Readings).

Urbana: University of Illinois Press, 1987. xvi + 207 pp. $21.95
Cloth ISBN 0-252-01331-X

Jiménez is known for his quest to formalize beauty within the structure of a poem, toward which end he fastidiously rewrote virtually all his work. Self and Image argues that this represents Jiménez's "Dr. Jekyll" persona, his Modern self, which dominates the influential anthologies of the "Obra" and hinders understanding of his "Mr. Hyde" personae, Jiménez's pre- and post-Modern poetic selves.

To exemplify the variety in Juan Ramón Jiménez, Self and Image analyzes six texts on selfhood, from all phases of the "Work." Three of these analyses are very specific in their focus; three others are more general. Chapters 2, 4 & 5 are extremely detailed readings of short poems; they focus on structure and syntax, on figures of speech, and on the semanticization of each text's distinctive features. Chapters 3, 6 & 7, while interpreting local linguistic features, focus their reading on larger segments and broader aspects of Jiménez's work (especially the struggle with the poet's "uncanny" inner selves).

A Preface discusses some of the basic presuppositions readers and critics bring to the Jiménez Obra today; it also provides an overview of subsequent chapters.

Chapter 1 notes that texts analyzed in Self and Image have been subjected to a "modern," a "post-modern" and a "specialist" reading. It explains that the "modern" reader has emerged from the theories and practice of Anglo and American Formalists and Saussurean structural linguistics. The "post-modern" reader has evolved from the impact post-structural discourses--semiotics, deconstruction, psychoanalysis--exercised on today's readings of poetic texts. The "specialist" is the traditional academic reader, whose prime concern is to elucidate the poet's work. This triad of readers reads each text concurrently. Chapter 1 also discusses three phases for the Jiménez Obra and explains why Jiménez is both a "Dr. Jekyll" and a "Mr. Hyde."

Chapter 2 analyzes the 1904 poem "¿Soy yo quién anda esta noche, / por mi cuarto, o el mendigo./ que rondaba mi jardín, al caer la tarde?..." To interpret the enigma of this poem, the reading adapts Greimas and divides the text into "bright" and "dark" actants; to interpret the innovative ways the text poeticizes time and space, it follows narrative theory and distinguishes the text's "plot" from its "story"; to interpret the poem's indeterminate final stanzas, the reading adapts Derrida's concept of différance. Chapter 3 is concerned with what Freud termed unheimlich, the "uncanny"; it studies latent negativity in Jiménez's poetry (specifically in its first phase, 1900-13). Adapting Greimas, the reading applies the term "lexeme" in opposition to the positive, Modern term "symbol." It is demonstrated that such nouns as "sol" and "luna" are plurivalent negative lexemes, which contain three or four sememes. It is argued that the negativity, which is studied in this chapter, is repressed by the Modern poet in the second phase of the Obra but resurfaces in its third and final phase.

Chapter 4 studies lexematic oppositions in the 1917 poem "Golfo." The specific focus is rhythmic contrast as a textual actant, because "ritmo" as opposed to "rima" is a distinguishing feature of Jiménez's Modern Obra. Rhythm functions lexematically to underscore and create meaning, and though lexematic oppositions remain unresolved, it is argued, the speaker in 1917 intuits the desire to blend the disparate urges felt inside. Chapter 5 develops the notion of actantial oppositions in the 1919 poem "Yo y Yo." Following Benveniste, it studies the text's explicit and implicit use of first and second person pronouns. "Yo y Yo" is exemplary of a Modern Jiménez poetic text, so particular attention is devoted to specifying--in as much detail as possible--the formal-structural techniques it employs to poeticize langue. In "Yo y Yo" the self's disparate urges cohere. However, following de Man, the analysis reveals ways in which the text deconstructs itself as it evolves. It is argued that in the last analysis the Modern persona is undermined by a negative post-modern other.

Chapter 6 studies basic "narrative topics"--death, love, art, spiritual enlightenment--in the 1941 to 1954 prose-poem Espacio. This obscure text is read as a summation of the Jiménez Obra. The basic lexematic oppositions in the text are analyzed, and it is argued that Espacio is post-modern in its blending of positive with negative insights. Chapter 7 distinguishes between Jiménez's pre-Modern, Modern and post-Modern visions. It argues that Juan Ramón's High Modern persona flourishes for approximately twenty years (1915-1936). It also analyzes manifestations of the Modern and post-Modern personae in Leyenda, the final, but only recently published, compendious anthological rewriting of his work. A Postscript assesses the insights modern, post-modern and specialist readings have attained for Jiménez and his work.

In brief, Self and Image provides, for Jiménez's poetry, new reading strategies which have been generated by current critical theories. These strategies produce fresh interpretations of his poems. It also presents readers with numerous instances of Jiménez's extremely sophisticated linguistic abilities; it documents a three phase evolution in his poetic style and thought, and it argues that he is a much more motley poet than literary history likes to claim.

WOMEN POETS OF SPAIN, 1860-1990: TOWARD A GYNOCENTRIC VISION.

Urbana and Chicago: University of Illinois Press, 1997. xix+366 pp.
Cloth, ISBN 252-02260-2, $49.95. Paper, ISBN 252-06559-X, $19.95.

The study falls into ten parts. The Preface discusses preliminary, theoretical issues: the recuperation of poetry by women; its classification along gender lines; the meaning of “female,” “feminist” and “feminine” in this study, as well as “female” and “male” as cultural not biological categories. The Introduction describes the distinctive features of the gynopoetics employed in the analysis of the texts, namely, negative gynocentric vision (marginalization and anger), positive gynocentric vision (autonomy and self-discovery), gynocritical vision, and gynocentric style; it then discusses Spanish poetry written by women prior to 1860--that is, before Rosalía de Castro published her first volume of poems--and then proceeds to survey the poetry written by women of the world from Eheduanna (born ca. 2300 B.C.) to the present.

Chapter 1 evaluates the feminist infrastructure of the poetry of Rosalía de Castro (1837-1885). The proto-gynocentric vision of Cantares gallegos is manifested, it is argued, in the social, political, psychological, and esthetic marginalization Rosalía experienced while writing her first book, in the female personae she included in this collection, and in her search for matrilineal roots. The evaluation of Follas novas and En las orillas del Sar contrasts the negative and positive images of womanhood and woman poet which abound in these books; it also studies the gynocentric imagery and the subversion of the androcentric worldview which lie at the heart of Rosalía de Castro’s mature poetry.

Chapter 2 focuses on two of the marginalized and ignored women poets of the male-dominated Spanish Generation of 1927--Ernestina de Champourcin (b. 1905) and Concha Méndez (1898-1986)--both of whom were praised by their male peers but afterwards fell into oblivion. It is argued that their poetry differs from the norm in its inscription of female personae; its articulation of female desire; its deployment of gynocentric metaphors; its nontranscendental vision; its subversion of an androcentric worldview; its voicing of the concerns of an aging woman; its religious impulse; and its concern for mothering. It is noted that Méndez's poetry in particular has all the strong features--such as subversion of patriarchal values, revision of male myths, gynocentric metaphors--which re-emerge in women’s poetry of the post-Franco era.

Chapters 3 through 5 study representative women poets of the Franco era (1939-75). Chapter 3 is devoted to the work of Carmen Conde (1907-96) and Concha Zardoya (b. 1914). It is argued that both poets are concerned with mothering as well as with marginalization; that they offer a critique of patriarchal culture and that each selects gynocentric metaphors to articulate that vision. Conde’s expression of female desire and Zardoya’s nontranscendental view of life are also studied. Chapter 4 is devoted to Angela Figuera (1902-84); it is argued that she demystified her precursors' discourse on motherhood; that she developed a gynocritical poetics which subverts patriarchal standards, and that her gynocentric vision articulates female desire, despair of talent, and anger. Chapter 5 reassesses the engaging vision of Gloria Fuertes (b. 1918). It discusses her ironical perception of the woman poet and her symbiotic poetics; her rebuttals of her male precursors; her development of self-reliance and her articulation of her own life and body; and her irreverent subversion and demystification of the male and his values.

Chapters 6 and 7 study certain women poets of the post-Franco era (1975 to the present). Chapter 6 is devoted to the work of three representative poets who were born before mid-century: Francisca Aguirre (b. 1930), María Victoria Atencia (b. 1931), and Clara Janés (b. 1940). Aguirre's sense of masochistic self-destruction is analyzed, as are her corrosive demystification of male myths, her subversion of male esthetics, and her gynocentric metaphors. Atencia's foregrounding of inner space is analyzed, as are her sense of a female self, her gynocentric style, her concern for mothering, and her revision of androcentric values. Janés's inscription of a female self is discussed together with her nontranscendental vision and her female poetics; an analysis of her audacious inscription of female desire concludes this chapter. Chapter 7 studies three representative poets from the 1980s: Amparo Amorós, Ana Rossetti (b. 1950), and Blanca Andréu (b. 1959). Amorós's female poetics is analyzed, as are her articulation of feminized myths, her concern for the female self, and her subversion of male stereotypes. Rossetti's subversive use of feminist desire is studied, as is her struggle to articulate the female self. An analysis of Andréu's inscription of the female self, her belief that inspiration stems from self-sacrifice, and her revision of literary and cultural myths brings the study to a close.

The Conclusion compares the preoccupations that emerge and reemerge, appear and/or disappear, during the 130 years under discussion; it also discusses other poets whose vision warrants future investigation.

BRIEF CURRICULUM VITAE

John C. Wilcox, Professor Emeritus of Spanish, joined the Department of Spanish, Italian and Portuguese, University of Illinois at Urbana-Champaign (UIUC), in 1979. He served as undergraduate advisor, Director of Graduate Studies (1988-92), Head of Department (1992-94, 2000-2004), Resident Director of the Barcelona Year Abroad Program of the Universities of California and Illinois (1986-88, 1994-96, 2004-2006, 2009-2011). He also served on a variety of campus-wide committees. He taught courses on modern and contemporary Spanish Peninsular literature for which his name regularly appeared on UIUC's List of Teachers Ranked as Excellent by their Students. In 2000, he received the LAS Dean's Award for Excellence in Undergraduate Teaching (1999-2000).

He has a B. A. (1965) from Bristol University, England, and a Ph. D. (1976) from The University of Texas at Austin. He was a Charles Phelps Taft Postdoctoral Fellow at the University of Cincinnati (1977-78) and a Fellow of the Center for Advanced Study at the University of Illinois at Urbana-Champaign (Spring 1984). He is an Honorary Associate of the Hispanic Society of America. He was President of The 20th-Century Spanish Association of America from 1998 to 2001. From 2004 thru 2007 he was Vice-President, President and Immediate Past President of the American Association of Teachers of Spanish and Portuguese. In 2010, he was appointed "Miembro Correspondiente" to the Universidad de Salamanca's "Cátedra Castilla y León de Estudios del Español y de Cooperación Académico."

As a scholar, he focused on late-nineteenth and twentieth-century Spanish Peninsular literature, where he specialized primarily on poetry and secondarily on drama. His publications included Women Poets of Spain, 1860-1990: Toward a Gynocentric Vision (Urbana and Chicago: University of Illinois Press, 1997), Self and Image in Juan Ramón Jiménez (Modern and Post-Modern Readings) (Urbana: University of Illinois Press, 1987), and an edition of the poetic prose of J. R. Jiménez's years in exile, Crímenes naturales (Prosas tardías: 1936-1954) (Madrid: Espasa-Calpe, 2005; & Visor, 2009). In addition to co-editing with Salvador J. Fajardo two guest issues of Anales de la literatura española contemporánea (16.1-2 [1991], 18.1 [1993]) dedicated to 20th-century Spanish poetry, he also co-edited with Fajardo At Home and Beyond: New Essays on Spanish Poets of the Twenties (Lincoln NB: Society of Spanish and Spanish-American Studies, 1983) and After The War: Essays on Recent Spanish Poetry (Boulder CO: Society of Spanish and Spanish-American Studies, 1988). He published some sixty reviews of scholarly books and contributed chapters to some thirty specialized monographs. In addition, his research articles appeared in such scholarly journals as Anales de la literatura española contemporánea, Comparative Literature Studies, Cuadernos hispanoamericanos, Hispania, Hispanic Review, Insula, La Torre, Revista Canadiense de Estudios Hispánicos, Revista de Estudios Hispánicos, Siglo XXI/20th Century, Studies in Twentieth Century Literature, A Trabe de Ouro and Yeats-Eliot Review. He is at work on a study of Spain's women dramatists from 1898 to the present.
